ARGYLE ARMADA
BEHIND THE SCENES OF THE PRO CYCLING LIFE
MARK JOHNSON
CONTENTS

Foreword vii
Preface and Acknowledgments xi
Cast of Characters xv

1 Winter Training Camp 1
2 The Cobbled Classics: Tour of Flanders and Paris-Roubaix 23
3 The Ardennes Classics 51
4 Amgen Tour of California 71
5 The Tour de France 91
6 USA Pro Cycling Challenge 115
7 Vuelta a España 139
8 Grand Prix Cycliste de Québec and Grand Prix Cycliste de Montréal 159
9 The Business of Pro Cycling 177

Index 199
About the Author 207
FOREWORD

It was the best of times, it was the worst of times.
—Charles Dickens, A Tale of Two Cities

"Hey, wow . . . ummm . . . hey, are you Jonathan Vaughters?" was the first thing I heard as I thumped into my seat for the long flight back to Denver from Paris this past July. At first I thought I had sat in the wrong seat or left my passport somewhere (again), but my not-so-silent admirer quickly told me all about how big a fan of the team he was, and how great 2011 had been, and how cool argyle was, and how awesome . . .

I was flattered, but this was the first of many circumstances that made me realize how the outside world viewed Garmin-Cervélo’s 2011 season. It created a much bigger stir than I would ever have ventured to guess.

I say “outside world” because when you are directing a race like the Tour, you are submerged in a microsociety that lacks big-picture perspective on the outside world. In my little world, 2011 had been a constant and nasty battle, a tightrope act with no net and no forgiveness. Of course, I had celebrated and appreciated the victories, but I was always all too aware that professional cycling is a game of “What have you done for me lately?”. It took this overly enthusiastic fellow passenger to make me realize that most people had looked at our 2011 as a dream season.

The dissonance between my 2011 and that of the broader world was tied up in the knowledge of how many difficult decisions had to be made through the year. And how each and every one of those decisions also carried the possibility of throwing the entire 2011 season into the bin if they were interpreted the wrong way or didn’t have the intended outcome. We had a unique team in 2011, one with many top-tier riders but without any definitive super talent like an Alberto Contador or a Philippe Gilbert. Our strength was always in our numbers and in our ability to play a calculated and cold game, one that flew in the face of cycling traditions. And, as is often the case, our strength was almost our undoing. While playing a tight, numerical game may be highly effective, it does not lend itself to satisfying individual objectives and personal goals. No one individual gets his way, which inevitably leads to tension. That tension was the reality of 2011.

Of course, tension is the common currency for all cycling teams and seasons. A cycling team is always an odd compromise among many parties. Riders have their individual ambitions, sponsors have their ideals and goals, the rules of the game and tradition have their pull on the agenda, the press has its loud opinion, and somewhere caught in the middle of all this rests the team. And specifically, the team manager. Not to diminish the role of the team, but the final decision as to how to execute the great compromise that makes up every choice in cycling rests with that individual.

Decision-making ability is what I’ve heard people refer to as power. Yet power was not what I felt in so many situations over the year. Instead of power, I felt the immense weight of responsibility before every decision I made. In each case, someone would be upset. Maybe a rider, maybe the press, maybe the fans, maybe a sponsor. Accepting and dealing with their upset is part of the responsibility of power, I suppose. Furthermore, what many don’t realize is that after I made a hard decision, I felt totally powerless as I watched the inevitable consequences unfold. Even when you win, the consequences of these decisions roll on, in the media and in the minds of fans. The consequences are yours for life, and once you’ve made your final choice, you are powerless to change the consequences.

So, for me, instead of a glory-filled romp, 2011 was a series of lonely and difficult decisions followed by anxiety as I awaited the results. From folding the former Cervélo TestTeam and its riders into our squad to allowing Johan Vansummeren to go ahead in Roubaix to leaving him and Dan Martin at home for the Tour de France. From the misconstrued “don’t chase” order in Flanders to infamously leaving Thor Hushovd off the Vuelta squad. Each and every choice balanced the interests of the riders, the sponsors, the UCI, fans, media, and investors. That’s what I remember about 2011.
While this may seem a melancholy assessment for such a brilliant year, making tough choices is where I find my pride. Each and every time, in retrospect and maturity, the hard and often unpopular decisions proved to be the decisions that were best for the team as a whole. There is a certain satisfaction in taking harsh criticism in the moment, swallowing hard and accepting the blows, and then being proven correct with the passage of time.

As I sit here in December and look back at 2011, I realize how many impossibly difficult and unpredictable decisions we had to make and how most of them turned out exactly as we hoped. And right there is why I feel a true sense of success. It’s not the performances or the wins unto themselves that make me know 2011 was our best season; it’s the process that went into creating those wins—the decisions that went into them. Above all, it’s knowing that the process that led to wins is on solid ground for the future. That brings sound sleep, in a way that lucky wins never do.

When you’re in the middle of so much movement, it’s difficult to reflect properly and understand each event and each accomplishment. I remember riding with the guys down the Champs-Élysées on our victory lap; was I thinking about what an incredible Tour we’d just had? Sadly, no. Instead, I was daydreaming about what we needed to do to make it better in 2012. It’s the nature of cycling: Never look back. That said, I hope this book and these memories will allow me a bit of storytelling peace someday. Cycling is such a magnificently gorgeous sport that to not stand back and look at it, for all of what it is and what it represents, would be tragic. While I’ve got next year to deal with now, I’m sure you’ll enjoy this trip through Slipstream’s finest year so far.

—Jonathan Vaughters
Dave Zabriskie sits on a glowing Plexiglas stage in a darkened ballroom at the AC Hotel Palau de Bellarista, a hotel perched like a shimmering glass-and-steel sentry above the cobblestoned passages of Girona. Dense curtains block views of the snowcapped Pyrenees. A lattice of studio lights illuminates the six-time U.S. time trial champion, while revolving fan blades cast shadows on a backdrop. A nest of Mavic wheels spins between the stage and boom-mounted television cameras. Zabriskie, the third American to wear the yellow jersey, following Greg LeMond and Lance Armstrong, looks like an action figure in a life-sized diorama.

DZ, as his teammates call him, stands up, puts his right hand on the small of his back, tilts slightly to the right, and winces. It's January 31 at the team's winter training camp, and while his Garmin-Cervélo teammates spent five hours riding in the Catalan countryside earlier today, back pain kept the 32-year-old off the bike. The American television network Versus is in Spain to film Zabriskie and his teammates talking about themselves. In four months the vignettes will be broadcast during the Tour of California and then the Tour de France.

Script in hand, the director asks Zabriskie about sweltering days ahead in July. “The Tour de France; what is it that makes it such a special event?” Gliding on a dolly, the camera films Zabriskie's response. “The energy that everyone is feeling is different,” he says. A machine suddenly pumps fog onto the set, and Zabriskie leaps up. The vegan waves his hands at a descending cloud. A camera operator assures him it is harmless. Zabriskie arches an eyebrow.

The assorted Garmin-Cervélo riders move through the three photo and video sets in the ballroom as if passing through stations of the cross. Christian Vande Velde, the U.S. star who has been with the team since 2008, rides the rollers for the camera.

When the director tells world champion Thor Hushovd they must be confusing him with stage directions, the Norwegian, a man of few words, responds with a faint smile. “I trust you guys.”

While the veterans like Hushovd and Vande Velde take it all in stride—their work takes place on the road, but this is where the bills get paid—the younger riders, including 25-year-old Irishman Dan Martin, are agog. Martin, who turned pro with the team in 2008, snaps photos of the set with his camera phone.

THE DAY AFTER THE VERSUS FILMING WRAPS up, team director (directeur sportif in cycling vernacular) Bingen Fernandez sits in the soaring glass hotel lobby with his laptop open to a spreadsheet.
It’s a daunting digital abacus with hundreds of cells scheduling some 250 days of racing for the team’s 29 riders over the next 10 months. Fernandez,
39, rode for six years with the Basque Euskaltel-Euskadi team and eight with French squad Cofidis.
His experience is an asset for the still fairly young Garmin-Cervélo team.

The soft-spoken Basque says Garmin-Cervélo is different from traditional professional cycling teams. It takes an empirical approach to both winning races and creating a sustainable business that supports riders, staff, owners, and sponsors.
“There must be a change in cycling,” he says in Spanish. “I think we need to leave the old things in cycling behind and adapt ourselves to modern life.”
However, hailing from the tradition-bound Basque country, he also values his sport’s conventions.
“I like the old way of thinking a little bit,” he says.
“But I’m also inventive. I like a combination. I like to innovate on top, but preserve the roots.”

Fernandez, who straddles worlds, cultures, and value systems, is a proxy for the revolutionary ethos of the Garmin-Cervélo team and how it is disrupting

ABOVE Dave Zabriskie on the television set in the team’s hotel. RIGHT Rider decals before being applied to team bikes.
the 150-year-old profession’s history. The team was started by ex-pro and current CEO and sporting director Jonathan Vaughters in 2003 as a development team for young U.S. riders. Vaughters is a one-time U.S. Postal Service rider who raced professionally from 1994 to 2004 in Europe and the United States, and a former teammate of U.S. superstar Lance Armstrong. Vaughters quit racing because he did not buy into a culture that systematically overlooked, hid, and ignored doping. Then he made it his goal to make the sport more financially stable for riders, team owners, sponsors, and race organizers. Slipstream, the holding company he created, is ushering in a new approach to the sport, most strikingly by rejecting drugs as tools for higher performance. Doping scandals scare sponsors away, and Vaughters knows that changing cycling’s doping culture is key to ensuring the sport’s financial stability.

The challenges inherent in this project are constant. The week before the camp kicks off, Vaughters fires the team’s longtime directeur sportif Matt White, when he learns the Australian referred a past rider to a doctor not approved by the team. While it seems an honest mistake, the shadow of doubt is enough for Vaughters to can the well-liked and widely respected director, ending his three-year tenure.

Dan Martin says the move sends a valuable message to the organization at the beginning of the year. “It shows that there’s no exceptions. Matt White is crucial to the development of the team, and it shows that even he wasn’t exempt from not playing by the rules.”

In Martin’s eyes, firing White keeps nonracing pressure off of the riders by making the team’s success equation manifest: For any medical or nutritional issues, riders have doctors and scientists on hand whom they can trust. “We have to consult the team medical staff for everything. That takes the risk away from the team, and it takes the pressure off us as well,” Martin says. The medical staff members, he adds, “have got our careers in their hands.”

There is neither a need nor an option to go outside this circle of vetted advisers. “I’ve grown up with this team, and it’s the only way I’ve ever known.”

“We’ve very much developed this anti-doping culture, as opposed to the sweep-it-under-the-rug culture,” the talented young rider continues. “This transparency that we’ve had from the beginning is one of the reasons that I came to the team.”

While Vaughters and the team’s press officer deal with the fallout of letting a longtime director go, across town it’s just after sunrise at the team service course, when head mechanic Geoff Brown rolls up a metal door with a clatter that echoes across the frost-covered countryside. Service course is a cycling term for a team’s mechanical headquarters, in this case a triple-bay garage in an industrial park on the outskirts of Girona. The unadorned cinder block structure swallows the team’s bus and fleet of trucks and cars like a whale

On January 31, Christian Vande Velde (top) and Ryder Hesjedal film promotional pieces that will air during July’s Tour de France.
Brown starts the morning by plugging a fat extension cord into a generator. Dressed in mechanic’s overalls and a wool hat under a snugged sweatshirt hood, he pulls on a pair of gloves, walks to a well-used espresso machine, and brews a steaming cup of coffee.

Brown started working in his father’s bike shop in Ottawa, Ontario, when he was a kid. After he wrenched for the Canadian national team through the 1992 Olympics, the Motorola team offered him a job that later became a position with the U.S. Postal team. “I headed off to Europe, and I’ve basically been here ever since,” the 51-year-old says, laughing. He has seen a lot.

Next to Brown’s bike stand, a recycling bin overflows with cardboard boxes from the hundreds of Cervélo bicycle frames and Mavic wheels that arrived during the previous week from the team’s sponsors. Toward the back of the garage, a tower of unopened bike boxes awaits the arrival of the rest of the six-person mechanic staff.

eating fish. The industrial park is so new the building does not yet have gas or electricity. Brown starts the morning by plugging a fat extension cord into a generator. Dressed in mechanic’s overalls and a wool hat under a snugged sweatshirt hood, he pulls on a pair of gloves, walks to a well-used espresso machine, and brews a steaming cup of coffee.

Brown started working in his father’s bike shop in Ottawa, Ontario, when he was a kid. After he wrenched for the Canadian national team through the 1992 Olympics, the Motorola team offered him a job that later became a position with the U.S. Postal team. “I headed off to Europe, and I’ve basically been here ever since,” the 51-year-old says, laughing. He has seen a lot.

Next to Brown’s bike stand, a recycling bin overflows with cardboard boxes from the hundreds of Cervélo bicycle frames and Mavic wheels that arrived during the previous week from the team’s sponsors. Toward the back of the garage, a tower of unopened bike boxes awaits the arrival of the rest of the six-person mechanic staff.

eating fish. The industrial park is so new the building does not yet have gas or electricity. Brown starts the morning by plugging a fat extension cord into a generator. Dressed in mechanic’s overalls and a wool hat under a snugged sweatshirt hood, he pulls on a pair of gloves, walks to a well-used espresso machine, and brews a steaming cup of coffee.

Brown started working in his father’s bike shop in Ottawa, Ontario, when he was a kid. After he wrenched for the Canadian national team through the 1992 Olympics, the Motorola team offered him a job that later became a position with the U.S. Postal team. “I headed off to Europe, and I’ve basically been here ever since,” the 51-year-old says, laughing. He has seen a lot.

Next to Brown’s bike stand, a recycling bin overflows with cardboard boxes from the hundreds of Cervélo bicycle frames and Mavic wheels that arrived during the previous week from the team’s sponsors. Toward the back of the garage, a tower of unopened bike boxes awaits the arrival of the rest of the six-person mechanic staff.
INDEX

NOTES. Italic page numbers indicate pictures. (When the caption and the picture are on different pages, both page numbers are cited, with only the page number for the picture in italics.)

When articles or prepositions in foreign languages (le, la, van, etc.) occur in people’s names, the name is alphabetized by the first letter of the article (e.g., Le Mével is alphabetized under L). When they occur in place names, restaurant names, etc., those names are alphabetized by the first letter of the first nonarticle word (e.g., El Ranxo is alphabetized under R).

AC Palau hotel, 1
and team presentation, 12, 13, 14
Ackley, Tim, 73, 74
AES, 72, 73, 89
AIGCP. See Association International des Groupes Cyclistes Professionnels
Ali, Muhammad, 34
Amgen Tour of California, 78, 79
fans at Nevada City, 73, 74
pre-race activities, 71–72
stage one canceled, 72–73
stage two, 74
stage three, 74–77
stage four, 77–78
stage five, 78–81
stage six (Solvang time trial), 81–82
stage seven, 82–86
stage eight, 86–87
team’s post-race activities and celebration of win, 87–89, 87, 88
time trial wheels, 81
Amstel Gold, 55
the Cauberg, 55–56
podium girls, 55
post-race activities, 57–59
pre-race activities, 51–55
race, 55–56
Antwerp, Belgium, 34–35
Armstrong, Lance, 1, 2
accused of doping, 74–77, 81, 194
as cycling hero, 34
Arsenault, Serge, 165–166, 169, 171–172
on business of cycling, 184–187, 188, 195
ASO, 107
Hushovd on, 107–109
Association International des Groupes Cyclistes Professionnels (AIGCP), 20–21 opposition to ban on race radios and threatened boycott of Tour of Beijing, 57–58

Banyay, Alex
and Amstel Gold, 53
comparing European and American riders, 66–67
and Liège–Bastogne–Liège, 64, 66–67
and Paris–Roubaix, 38
and Porsche team car, 87
in snow at North Lake Tahoe, 73
and Tour of California, 73, 81, 86
Basso, Ivan, and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 115, 129, 156, 177, 193
Bauer, Steve, 120
Belgium
and significance of Tour of Flanders, 27
See also Tour of Flanders
Benson, Daniel, 26–27
Bernard, Eric, 37, 38
Beyond the Peloton
video series, 26–27, 81
Bike packing kit, 20
Biondi, Andrea, 40, 42, 91
Blanc, François-Xavier, 19
on Vaughters, 19
Blancett, Chris, 73, 74
Bobridge, Jack, 119
Boonen, Tom, 23, 28
Breaking Away, 131, 137
Brown, Geoff, 3–4, 5, 17, 187
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Montréal, 162, 165
and Paris–Roubaix, 37, 38
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 123, 124
Buckbaume, John, 120–122
Business of pro cycling
Arsenault on, 184–187, 188, 195
baseball as model, 59, 177, 188
Ellis on, 195–196
as entertainment business, Martin on, 89
and fan intimacy, 195
Farrar on, 191–192
Ford on, 194
Formula One auto racing as model, 59, 187, 195
Harmon on, 190–191
Hushovd on, 107–111
lack of cooperation among “higher powers,” 189–190
McQuaid on, 182–184
pace on, 193–194
and prominence of Tour de France, 184–187, 188–189
and riders’ difficulty in unionizing, 190–191
Sharwen on, 194–195
Talansky on, 154–155
tennis as model, 186–187
Vande Velde on, 190
Vaughters on, 187–188
Vaughters on team’s role in, 177–182, 196
Zabriskie on, 125–126, 137

Cancellara, Fabian
and Paris-Roubaix, 41–42, 49
and Tour of Flanders, 23–25, 29
Cantele, Noemi, 11
Cassat, Jon, discussing Tour de France, 37–38
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 133
and Vansummeren’s Paris-Roubaix win, 45, 46
Cavendish, Mark, 35–36, 98
Charleroi, Belgium, 59–60
Cipollini, Mario, 35
Classics, 23, 25
Garmin-Cervélo as winner, 45
Garmin-Cervélo described as having top 10s but no wins, 39
Cobo, Juan José, 141, 146, 151
Contador, Alberto, 61
Copenhagen Classic, 115, 116–117
Costa, Rui, 165, 169
CyclingNews Web site, 26–27
Dalí, Salvador and Gala, 9
Danielson, Stephanie, 85, 97–98
and mother Christiane, 97
Danielson, Steve, 85, 86, 97
Danielson, Tom, 19
on difficulty of Tour of California, 89
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Montréal, 159, 165, 166, 167, 169
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Québec, 159, 165
Ketchell’s strong assessment of, 77–78
and Liège-Bastogne-Liège, 68
on racing in U.S. compared with Europe, 84
and Tour of France, 92, 97–98, 98, 102, 103, 107, 111, 117
and Tour of California, 71, 72, 74, 77, 85, 86, 87
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 115, 122, 124–125, 126
De Wilde, Sjef, 36
directeur sportif, defined, 2
Dolce Chantilly hotel, 36–37, 37
Domestiques
Hushovd as, 46
Vansummeren as, 34
Donald, Louise
as “always on,” 34
financial discussion with Vaughters and Johnson, 15, 16, 17
spreadsheets tracking team’s assets, 34
and Tour of Flanders, 25–26, 28
on Vansummeres, 34
La Doyenne. See Liège-Bastogne-Liège
DSM, 57, 181

Ecclestone, Bernie, 58–59
Ellis, Doug, 13–14, 189
on cycling business, 195–196
and Paris-Roubaix, 37, 45, 46, 47
and Vansummen, 46–47
and Vaughters, 12–13
Europcar team, 93
Evans, Cadel, 61
and Tour de France, 94, 96, 126
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 115

Farrar, Tyler, 12
and anti-doping culture, 92
on cycling business, 191–192
and Ghent-Wevelgem, 27–28
and Paris-Roubaix, 38, 39, 46, 179
reaction to filming by Benson, 26
and Scheldeprijs, 35, 36, 73
and Tour of France, 91–92, 95, 97, 103
and Tour of Flanders, 25–26, 29–30, 32, 33
and training ride southeast from Girona, 16–20, 17, 21
and Vuelta a España, 141
winning for Weylandt, 98
winning Tour de France stage three with Dean and Hushovd’s assistance, 98–99 Fernandez, Bingen, 2, 113, 143–144, 156
on team’s approach, 2
and Tour de France, 97
Fischer, Murilo, 19, 57
and Amstel Gold, 55, 56
and Flèche Wallonne, 60
and Vuelta a España, 141
Flanders classics, 26, 57. See also Tour of Flanders
Flaxia, Juan Antonio, 172

Sample from Argyle Armada by Mark Johnson
Copyright VeloPress 2011 all rights reserved

Sample from Argyle Armada by Mark Johnson
Copyright VeloPress 2011 all rights reserved
INDEX

La Flèche Wallonne, 59–64
Clif Bars for, 64
Mur de Huy climb, 60–61
sign-in, 62
Ford, Bonnie, 85–86, 194
Fostvedt, Eric, 80
Fowler, Sean and Olga, 108, 113, 156
Fowler, Tom, 165
Fries, Oscar, 79
Fromm, Chris, 79, 80

Gabi, Kevin, 124
Garden of the Gods (Colorado), 116, 117
Garmin-Cervélo (team), 1, 196, 197
anti-doping culture, 3, 19
and burritos, 106, 107, 133
at Champs-Élysées, 112, 113
chefs and cuisine for team, 71–72, 72
as classics killer, or not, 39, 45 coffee time at El Ranxo, 18, 19–20
coffee time at Taverne Evora, 26
directeur sportif, 2
monthly expenses for Tour of Italy, 91 revolutionary approach of, 2–3 rider decals, 2
riders watching cyclocross world championships on computer, 14–15, 15 service course (Girona), 3–4, 5, 6, 7 team presentation at AC Palau, 12, 13, 14
Tour de France victors on winner’s stand, 114 training rides (near Girona, Spain), 9–12, 9–12, 16–20, 17, 18
Vaughters and staff celebrating Tour de France time trial win, 96, 97
Vuelta a España, 354
as winner of team competition at Tour of California, 87
See also Slipstream
Gerk, Björn, 51, 52, 59, 67, 68
Gesink, Robert
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Montréal, 169
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 115
Ghent-Wevelgem, 27–28
Gilbert, Philippe, 56, 126, 179–181, 181
and Flèche Wallonne, 64
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Montréal, 166, 167, 169
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Québec, 161–162
and Liège-Bastogne-Liège, 68
and Tour de France, 94, 95
Giro de Lombardia, 35
Girona, Spain, vi
Global Cycling Promotion, 57
Grand Prix Cycliste de Montréal, 159, 160, 172, 173, 175
fans, 82–83
post-race activities, 169–171
pre-race activities, 162–165
race, 165–169
Grand Prix Cycliste de Québec, 159–160, 163
fans, 160–163, 169, 170
race, 160–162
sprint competition, 160–161
Grande Boucle. See Tour de France
Greenish, Chris and Barbara, 71–72, 72
curry dish prepared by, 72
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 117–118, 120

Hagen, Edvald Boasson, 35, 106–107, 172
Hamilton, Tyler, and alleged doping by Armstrong, 74–77, 81, 89, 194
Hammond, Roger, 9, 14
on business of cycling and UCI, 190–191
and Paris-Roubaix, 38, 39
at El Ranxo, 19–20
and Tour of Flanders, 28–29
Hampton, Andy, 131
Haussler, Heinrich, 14, 19, 163
and Paris-Roubaix, 38, 39, 45–46, 48
and Tour of Flanders, 23–24, 29, 30, 31
and Vuelta a España, 141, 143, 156, 157, 157
Hausman, Ashley, 86–87
Hell of the North. See Paris-Roubaix
Heinrich, Ryder, 3, 20, 57, 58
and Amstel Gold, 51, 52, 53, 56, 56
and Flèche Wallonne, 60, 62, 63, 64, 64
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Montréal, 159, 160, 166, 167, 168, 169
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Québec, 159, 161, 162, 163, 169
gratitude for his fiancée and opportunities, 171–172, 175 hand, 172
on inspiring and being motivated by kids, 171 leading on Champs-Élysées, 52, 113
and Liège-Bastogne-Liège, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69
as the man in Canada, 159, 160, 161
and morning drug test, 103–103
post-Montreal race activities, 169–171 receiving massage, 53, 53
relaxing after Tour of California, 89
and Tour de France, 93, 96, 48, 106–107, 111, 122, 123
and Tour of California, 71, 74, 77, 77, 87–87, 88, 84, 87, 125
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 115, 123, 133, 135
on the year’s racing, 172–175
Hickenlooper, John, 115, 129–131
Hinault, Bernard, 176
Hincapie, George
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Montréal, 166, 167
and Tour of California, 83

Sample from Argyle Armada by Mark Johnson
Copyright VeloPress 2011 all rights reserved

Copyright VeloPress 2011 all rights reserved
and Tour of Flanders, 29
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 120
Hefter, Ashley, 175
Hollander, Dave and Noah, 41
Hoogerland, Johnny, 172
Horner, Chris, 77
Hotel Lepelbed, 23, 25
HTC-Highroad, 196
Hushovd, Thor, 1–2, 4, 8, 14–15, 20, 26, 190, 391
on ASO, UCI, and business of cycling, 107–111
and Paris-Roubaix, 39, 41–42, 45–46
at El Ranxo, 19–20
and Scheldeprijs, 35
and team’s marketing, 38
and Tour de France, 91–92, 94–95, 103–106, 104, 106–107, 106, 113
and Tour of California, 71, 72, 74
and Tour of Flanders, 23–24, 28–30, 28
and Vuelta a España (withheld from), 139–140 wig, club, and hammer at Tour de France team presentation, 93–94, 94 and yellow and polka-dot jerseys at Tour de France, 97, 100, 113
Independence Pass (Colorado), 118–123, 119, 120–121, 123
Johnson, Matt
discussing Tour de France, 37, 38
financial discussion with Vaughters and Donald, 15, 16, 17
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Montréal, 165
and sponsor pitches, 16
and Tour of Flanders, 28, 33
and Vansummeren’s Paris-Roubaix win, 45, 46, 47
Johnson, Steve, 115
Kerry, John, 99
Kettle, Robby
on people trying to associate themselves with riders, 78
and strong assessment of Danielson, 77
and Tour de France, 94, 97
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 118, 124
Kimmage, Paul, 92, 100, 156
King, Gavin, 91, 168, 169
Klier, Andreas, 4, 9, 79
on classics winners, 34, 45
on cycling’s need for heroes, 34, 45
and digital boundaries, 34
as “GPS Klier,” 25
and Paris-Roubaix, 38, 45, 46
at El Ranxo, 19–20
and Tour of Flanders, 23–26, 24, 28
and Vuelta a España, 141, 143, 148, 152, 156, 157
Kreder, Michel
and Arstid Gold, 52, 55
and Flèche Wallonne, 60, 62, 64, 64
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Montréal, 159, 174, 175
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Québec, 159, 162, 163
Kriestoff, Alexander, 35
Kron, Klaas, 146
Lancaster, Brett, 12, 38
Landis, Floyd, 89, 194
Le Mével, Christophe, 14
brake problem at Flèche Wallonne, 60, 61
and Flèche Wallonne, 60, 61, 62–64, 62, 67
helping young fan ride up hill, 66
and Liège-Bastogne-Liège, 64, 65, 68
and Vuelta a España, 140–141, 143, 146, 148, 151
Leipheimer, Levi, 77, 81, 85
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Montréal, 166, 167, 169
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 118, 122, 124, 129
LeMond, Greg, 1, 116
Liège-Bastogne-Liège, 35 course description, 64–65
pre-race training and preparations, 64–68
race, 68
Liggitt, Phil, 115
Linareis, Joan, 7, 17, 19
and Arstid Gold, 62
and Flèche Wallonne, 60
fixing Le Mével’s brakes at Flèche Wallonne, 60, 67 Lloyd, Daniel, 181, 182
and Tour of Flanders, 25, 24, 29, 70
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 115, 118, 132, 133
Lowden, Jeff, 60
Maaskant, Martijn, 21, 57
Mangas, Daniel, 45
Marie, Lionel, 9, 113
on Hushovd, 105–106
and Paris-Roubaix, 38–39, 39
Martin, Dan, 2, 11, 12, 175
and crash at Flèche Wallonne, 62, 67
on cycling as entertainment business, 89
and Flèche Wallonne, 60, 62
and Liège-Bastogne-Liège, 64, 65, 66, 68
on riders as powerless, 73–74
on team’s nonconformity, 30–33
and Tour of California, 71, 73–74, 78–81, 78, 80, 87–89
treatment by Reichlin, 143–145, 145
on U.S. cycling fans, 89
on Vaughters’s advice for Tour of California, 81 and victory celebration at Tour of California, 88
and Vuelta a España, 140–145, 140, 147, 150, 151, 155, 157

Mavic, S. 19
McCarthy, Justin, 118
McQuaid, Pat, 115, 116, 118–120

Mechanics
all-access pass, 160, 161
congratulations from Vaughters, 113
and Paris-Roubaix, 37, 38
at service course (Girona), 3–9, 5–8

Merckx, Eddy, 35, 169
Messick, Andrew, 77, 77, 89
on cycling business and Tour de France, 91, 188–189
Monuments of cycling, 35
Monfort, Maxime, 60, 64
Monument Valley, 78–81
Monuments of cycling, 35
Montrouge, Alyssa, 7, 7, 52, 53, 57
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Montréal, 166, 170
and Liège-Bastogne-Liège, 68
and Tour of France, 102, 107
and Tour of California, 80, 81, 85
Mur de Huy, 60–61
Murphy-Lausie, Caroline, 37, 38
Murray, John, 96

Navardauskas, Ramunas, 19, 187
and Tour de France, 92, 95, 96, 98, 99–100, 99, 109
and Vaughters, 96–97, 100

Ni Hidalgo, Sandra
and Farrar’s crash at Scheldeprijs, 36
and Paris-Roubaix, 39, 39, 45
and Vuelta a España, 143–144

Niemie, Serge, 45, 103
and Vansummeren’s crash at Vuelta a España, 149, 151
No riding, defined, 29
Nuyens, Nick, 52
and Tour of Flanders, 30
Nys, Sven, 14–15

Omloop Het Nieuwsblad, 57

Pace, Matthew, 193–194
Palmer, Alex, 28
on Tour de France, 37, 38
Pana, Vincente, 153, 155
Paris-Roubaix, 35
description of course, 37–38
energy bars for, 39
fans, 36–37, 40–41
post-race celebrations, 45–49, 46–49
pre-race activities, 36–41
race and Vansummeren’s win, 41–45, 42–44, 193, 194
Pals, Danny, 61
Petacchi, Alessandro, 145
Peterson, Tom, 12
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Montréal, 159, 165, 169
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Québec, 159, 166
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 115, 118, 119, 123, 135, 137, 187
Phinney, Davis, 133
Pierce, John, 52
Pogracic, Marja, 20, 170
reaction to Hamilton’s allegations of doping by Armstrong, 74–77
and Scheldeprijs, 36, 37
and Tour of California, 74–77, 81
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 123
Pooley, Emma, 14, 14, 81
Poza, Andrzej, 7–8, 8
and Paris-Roubaix, 38
Le Puy du Fou, 92–94, 95

Sample from Argyle Armada by Mark Johnson
Copyright VeloPress 2011 all rights reserved
Québec City, Québec, 159–160, 162, 163, 166

Rabin, Matt, 96
Race radios, 57–58, 120
El Ranxo, 18, 19–20
Rasch, Gabriel, 38, 45
Reichlin, Kevin, 52, 53, 54
and Amstel Gold, 54–55
on keeping one’s head in the race, 68
on cyclists’ bowel problems, 56
on treatment of Martin, 143–145, 145
Rihs, Andy, 126
Rompinos, Mathieu, 68
Ronde van Vlaanderen, See Tour of Flanders
Roy, Jérémy, 105–106
San Gabriel Mountains (California), 83
Sanchez, Samuel, 61, 62
Sanchez, Samuel, 61, 62
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 115
Sastre, Carlos, 145
Scheldeprijs, 34–36
Schleck, Andy, 68
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 115, 118, 119, 120, 129
and Vuelta a España, 140
Schleck, Franck, 68
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 115
Schoonaker, Joachim
and Amstel Gold, 51–52
and Paris-Roubaix, 38
and Tour of Flanders, 25
Service course, defined, 3
Sherwen, Paul, 115, 194–195
Skiptonham, 3, 26, 97, 100, 111, 196, 197
as low-budget team, 77
team presentation in Boulder, 177, 196
Tour de France wins, 111–112
Vande Velde on, 134
See also Garmin-Cervèlo
Sørensen, Chris Anker, 140
Steffen, Prentice, 81–85, 85
Stetina, Peter, 7, 17, 20, 170, 171
and Fitchie Walton, 60, 62, 64
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Montréal, 159, 162, 172
and Grand Prix Cycliste de Québec, 159, 162, 163, 168
and Liège-Bastogne-Liège, 64, 65, 68
and Quebec sprint competition, 160, 161
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 115, 118, 119, 120, 129
and Vuelta a España, 140
Stybar, Zdenek, 34–10
Summerhill, Danny, 126–127
heart-shaped bed story, 123
and USA Pro Cycling Challenge, 115–116, 117, 126, 127, 133
Summerhill, Fran, 127
Talansky, Andrew
on his career and the cycling business, 151–156
and Tour of California, 71, 77, 83–85, 84, 85, 86
on Vaughters, 104–105
and Vuelta a España, 141, 157, 156–157
as winner of best young rider jersey, 77, 78
Tata, 28
Team time trial (TTT), 94, 95, 97, 179–181, 184
Ten Dam, Laurens, 129
TIIA-CHESF squad, 12–13
Tjallingi, Maarten, 49, 79
Tour de France, 89, 91, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 190, 191, 195–196
ASO (tour owner), 107
disproportionate power in pro cycling, 184–187, 188–189
drug testers, 91, 102–103
Les Essarts time trial, 94–98, 94
fans, 105, 106
field on Champs-Élysées, 112, 113
first mountain stage, 120
laundry on lino, 92 98th running of, 91
post-race activities, 113–114
pre-race activities, 91–94
pre-race press conference, 82
Pyrenees stages, 100–106, 101, 102
and Suze-la-Rousse, Provence, 106
stage one, 98–99
stage two, 99–100
stage five, X00
stage six, 99
stage 16, 106–107
team presentation, 92–94, 92
team’s success in, 111–112
yellow, green, and polka-dot jerseys, 95–96, 100, 113
Tour de Beijing, 57–58
Tour of California, See Amgen Tour of California
Tour of Flanders, 23, 32, 33, 35, 178
fans, 29
Garmin-Cervèlo team car after crash, 33
post-race reaction, 33–34
pre-race training, 25–26
race, 25–30
water bottles for, 34
Towle, Dave, 77
TTT: See Team time trial

Ullrich, Jan, 34
Union Cycliste International (UCI), 26 and Armstrong, 194
drug testers, 102–103, 156
Hammond on, 191
Hushovd on, 107–108
infantilization of riders with regards to doping, 155 sporting value system, 177, 182 threatening letter to Vaughters, 82–83
Tour of Beijing and ban on race radios, 57–58
Vande Velde on, 190
young-cyclists rule, 126

Van Diemen, Adrie, 53
and Amstel Gold, 54, 55
on Klier, 148
and Paris-Roubaix, 38, 45
and team presentation at AC Palau, 14
and Vuelta a España, 141, 146, 151, 156, 157
Vanmarcke, Sep
and Paris-Roubaix, 36, 38, 41–42
Paris-Roubaix, as winner of, 42–44, 48–49, 49, 192
and Scheldeprijs, 34
taking on water bottles for teammates, 87
and team presentation at AC Palau, 14
and Vuelta a España, 141, 146, 151, 156, 157
Van Petegem, Peter
and Paris-Roubaix, 36, 38, 39, 41–42
Paris-Roubaix, as winner of, 42–45, 44–46, 48–49, 49, 192
and Scheldeprijs, 34
taking on water bottles for teammates, 87
and team presentation at AC Palau, 14
and Tour of California, 71, 72, 74, 75
and Vuelta a España, 140, 141, 146, 151, 156, 157
Vaughters, Jonathan, 3, 15, 46, 17, 86, 189
ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Mark Johnson has covered cycling as a writer and photographer for national and international publications since the 1980s. His work has been published in cycling titles including VeloNews in the United States, Cycling Weekly in the UK, Vélo in France, and Ride Cycling Review in Australia as well as general-interest publications including the Wall Street Journal and the San Diego Union-Tribune. A category II road cyclist, Mark has also bicycled across the United States twice and completed an Ironman triathlon. He has a PhD in English literature from Boston University and has worked as a freelance writer and photographer for the Slipstream Sports cycling team since 2007. His other passion is surfing, which he does frequently from his home in Del Mar, California.
Fighting for first place with a budget half that of its main ProTour competitors, the 2011 Garmin-Cervélo team became one of the most admired teams in pro cycling.

From winter training camp to the Champs-Elysées, Argyle Armada is a portrait of life as a member of a pro cycling team during a time of painful transition for the sport. Inside the team buses and stage-race hotels, cycling struggles to shake off the hidebound traditions of the past and expand to a global sports franchise. The charge is led by Garmin-Cervélo team founder Jonathan Vaughters and his unconventional band of bike racing revolutionaries.

Brilliantly chronicled by writer-photographer Mark Johnson, who was embedded with the squad throughout its 2011 season, Argyle Armada is a deep look inside one team as it battles for the future of professional cycling.

FOREWORD BY JONATHAN VAUGHTERS